Recipients, 101, are older than system

The modern honours system is 100 years old, created by George V to recognise noncombatants for their roles during the First World War. Yet two recipients on today's list are even older (Dominic Kennedy writes).

Lieutenant-Colonel Mordaunt Cohen, 101, vice-president of the Association of Jewish Ex-Servicemen, is appointed MBE for services to Second World War education. As war broke out, a refugee hostel for Jewish girls fleeing the Nazis was established in his home town of Sunderland. Their descriptions of suffering moved him to enlist. He was mentioned in dispatches for bravery in the Burma campaign. "I'm especially proud of the immense contribution made by the 60,000 Jewish soldiers in World War Two," he said.
